

15 September 1999

Agricultural Secretary Dan Glickman

Mr. Secretary,

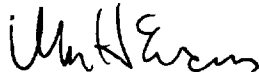

Genetically engineered and irradiated foods absolutely must be so labeled so consumers can distinguish what they are buying.

You are mistaken if you assume that only Europeans are concerned about engineered, irradiated or adulterated food ingredients and products.

To deprive the public of information that easily identifies food containing ingredients made from genetically engineered components would be an act of duplicity on your part.

It is appalling to know that the Clinton Administration opposes this labeling. And to think, Bill Clinton is a product of the 60's which held such promise for the world.

Very sincerely,

Wm. H. Evans
